In 1873 only the spire-shaped marker of husband John Harrison Allison and wife Dicy Ann (Trapp) Allison remains. In 1967 an additional five stones could be found.

The following record of the Old Hudspeth
 Graveyard was made by Betty Dagenais on Apr. 9, 1967. The two fenced Schmidt graves missed being destroyed when old Hwy #59 was built and appear to be the remnants of a large cemetery.
 Some old stones noted in 1950 but gone
 in 1967 are: Davis, 1888; Grooms 1880;
 Durham 1877; and Rau---legible only.

This old cemetery has long been closed since about 1890 when Armstrong Cemetery near Rushville became the "official" cemetery of Rushville. Several seasons of very wet weather in the 1880's caused the cemetery to sink and therefore to be abandoned.

The Dickson Graveyard record was made by Betty Dagenais on April 9, 1967.

Kerlin Graveyard, sometimes referred to as Old Halls Cemetery is one of the oldest burial grounds in Buchanan County. It dates from the time of the earliest pioneers following the Platte Purchase. Tom Kerlin with a band of Kentuckians settled in the vicinity. A portion of a field was first used as a burial plot for slaves on Kerlin's property. He set aside several acres of his land for a community burial ground. It was used by all, free of charge, as it is today.

Few early graves had other than long-gone wooden crosses. Because of the steep slopes and weathering, stones have misplaced or not to be found. The cemetery was neglected for many years, but it is now properly cared for. There are two or three burials there a year. The cemetery appears to have ample space but old burials often become evident when there is preparation for new burials. No record has been kept of past burials.
